Attention Early Career Professionals:

The Student and Early Career Scientist Committee is excited to share that we will be organizing a mini-symposium session specifically for early career professionals at the International IPM Symposium in March 2021 in Denver, CO. We aim to give early career scientists a platform to present preliminary data and early science stories they wish to share. Given that this is a global meeting across several disciplines, we'd love to have motivated, interested scientists work together in a cross-disciplinary approach.

The event theme is Implementing IPM across Borders and Disciplines and we aim to bring together researchers from around the globe to share the latest IPM strategies for managing pests. You can read more about the meeting here: ipmsymposium.org/2021.

If you will be in your first five years as an IPM professional at the time of the symposium (including post docs and those in new positions for less than 5 years), and are interested in organizing and/or presenting in this session please contact Katelyn Kesheimer by March 16th at kesheimer@auburn.edu to get involved or if you have any questions.
